Ashbrook
In the Freedom Business since 1983
Dear Friends,

Remember when learning American history was simple? Let’s face it. Learning the true story of America and our Founding principles is getting difficult for too many of our young people. Rather than being a place where students can discover what means to be American and develop an educated patriotism, history class is becoming a political minefield.

It doesn’t have to be this way. Ashbrook has declared independence from the politicization of our classrooms. Through our ambitious In the Spirit of ‘76 initiative, we have sparked a much-needed educational revolution.

This academic year alone, we hosted over 250 programs for thousands of teachers from all 50 states—reaching the young through those who teach the young. These teachers encourage students to read and discuss the words of those men and women who lived and wrote our history. As a result, students come to their own conclusions about their country as they discover for themselves the true story of America.

In addition to programs for teachers, Ashbrook offers educational programs that reach students directly. We offer an on-campus summer Academy for high school students, as well as a rigorous academic program for undergraduate students through our top-rated programs. Ashbrook is educating the next generation of principled leaders for America’s future.

In this 2021-22 Annual Report, we extend our full gratitude to the many good Americans across the country who support Ashbrook and our mission. May you be inspired with hope as you read through this year’s accounting of our important work in the freedom business.

Sincerely,

Jeffrey Sikkenga

THE PROBLEM

Students Don’t Know the Truth About America

It’s true that young people are not learning the basic facts about our history. But the problem goes even deeper. Too many of our nation’s young people are not learning the meaning and importance of our Founding principles, so they are not developing the respect for and devotion to America needed to perpetuate freedom in this country. Ours is not just a crisis of facts and information. It is a crisis of understanding and devotion.

But why? Many young people are simply bored by lectures and the rote memorization in their history and civics classes and conclude that America’s history is irrelevant to their lives. But a growing number also believe something far more dangerous. Cultural pressure has persuaded them to believe America is a fundamentally oppressive nation. Biased textbooks too often reinforce this notion and stifle any thought that would dare to challenge it.

THE SOLUTION

Revolutionize How Teachers Teach and How Students Learn About America

Fortunately, there is a solution. Ashbrook has developed an educational approach rooted in conversations about the primary historical documents that define our history, like the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and many others. This active learning approach immerses students and teachers in the wonderfully interesting story of America and the Founding principles that make our country exceptional.

Of course, America isn’t perfect. We haven’t always lived up to our Founding principles. We have sometimes fallen terribly, tragically short. But America’s Founders, despite their varying backgrounds, shared a common spirit and understanding of government that allowed them—even when they disagreed with each other—to create what has become the most free and prosperous country on earth. Our solution is to share this truth with students and to prepare them to make use of their freedom to govern themselves as individuals and to flourish in their families, communities, and nation.
At Ashbrook, we believe the best way to discover America’s story is to begin from the maxim that “all men by nature desire to know, but they don’t want to be told.” This principle flips the traditional mode of education on its head and results in better students, better teachers, better citizens, and a better American republic.

1 ASK QUESTIONS
Where most traditional education begins by inundating students with information, we begin by asking questions. Questions like, “What is the foundation of the American republic?”; “What does it mean that ‘all men are created equal’?”; “What does it mean to be free?”

2 INSPIRE WONDER & DISCOVERY
Being challenged to find their own answers to these questions sparks wonder in students. And it inspires them to discover more for themselves. Talking with peers and digging deeper into the words and deeds of great thinkers, statesmen, and historical figures not only helps them learn to think seriously but also prepares them to carry on a distinctly American conversation for the good of the country.

3 CULTIVATE UNDERSTANDING & DEVOTION
Once inspired to seek out answers to the big questions of American history and government for themselves, understanding and devotion naturally follow. Students take ownership of their education and pursue it not simply for a grade but because they recognize it is good. Students begin picking up information as a matter of course, making their own judgments, and cultivating a deeper understanding of and respect for America.

“We’re coming to a deeper kind of knowledge by reading individual texts, putting them in context, and thinking about what the authors really meant. It gives us a stake in the game.”
– CAMPBELL O., ASHBROOK STUDENT –

“In high school, we just absorb information and then spit it back out. But at Ashbrook, I’ve learned what an American is and have come to respect that.”
– JOHN P., ASHBROOK STUDENT –

4 AN APPROACH THAT WORKS

Students:
- Learn how to think, not what to think
- Understand and appreciate America’s exceptional history and Founding principles
- Develop habits of personal responsibility and become principled leaders, devoted to preserving freedom in America

Teachers:
- Become confident and effective with a renewed passion for teaching American history and civics
- Use original historical documents, keeping bias and indoctrination out of the classroom
- Help students discover America’s true story through conversation

Citizens:
- Find common ground as Americans on the Founding principles of self-government: liberty, equality, consent of the governed, the rule of law, and limited, constitutional government
- Understand and appreciate our history and the men and women who made our freedom possible
- Recognize America’s position in the world as a “shining city on a hill”
An Educational Revolution in America’s Classrooms

It took a revolution to build this country. It will take an educational revolution to keep it. That’s why Ashbrook launched In the Spirit of ’76. We are committed to preserving freedom in America by educating the next generation of American citizens in the history and Founding principles of our country. And the best way to teach the young is through those who teach the young.

In the Spirit of ’76 aims to recruit, educate, equip, and sustain a network of 45,000 American history and government teachers across America. With a single teacher reaching up to 5,000 students over the course of their career, we can reach millions of students. Since engaging in this ambitious initiative, we have hosted over 900 programs for thousands of teachers, growing our network to over 30,000 teachers.

Now, in the final year of the campaign, we must finish strong to ensure that America has something to celebrate on the 250th anniversary of our nation’s independence.

Archer Fellowships Provide New Opportunities for Study

For more than 30 years, the Ashbrook Collegium Series has provided Ashbrook Scholars with opportunities to engage with leading scholars and thinkers as they discuss their latest book or work. Now, thanks to a generous gift from Director’s Club members Bob and Jan Archer, Ashbrook has enhanced the Series. This year a number of colloquium speakers were awarded an Archer Fellowship and spent multiple days on campus in conversation with students. Each Archer Fellow not only offered an hour and a half long colloqui um with a student but also taught a full one-hour credit course. The education of our Ashbrook Scholars was enhanced by not only the colloquia speakers but also the Ar cher Fellows who offered their expertise and scholarship on a wide variety of topics.

A SINGLE GREAT STATESMAN

One great statesman can create a seismic shift not only in his or her community or state but also in the nation. Think also of the dynamic public officials and civ ic-minded business leaders who make a difference in your community. The Ashbrook Scholar Program for undergraduate stu dents cultivates leaders with a deep understanding of our American Founding principles. This academic year, the pro gram welcomed a record setting 63 students into the program. And we are expanding even more because America needs the leaders produced by the Ashbrook Scholar Program. Each Ashbrook Scholar receives an education centered on studying what is beautiful, good, and true. And students are advised to use their leisure well because it will not last forever. Graduating Ashbrook Scholars know this only too well, as they take on leadership positions in America’s civic life and begin ap plying the lessons learned in the classroom to their chosen fields of business, education, law, politics, and more. This academic year, Ashbrook launched a new alumni relations program to better sup port our growing national network of over 600 alumni. The program will provide alumni with opportunities to meet and engage with each other virtually and in person. Alumni can take advantage of these opportunities to share job opportunities, mentor each other, and above all, feed their love of learning and liberty that was ignited during their days of leisure at Ashbrook. Josh Dietz, a 2011 grad uate of the Ashbrook Scholar Program and the Manager of Alumni Outreach, said that he hopes to “Solve among alumni a strong corps of patriotic and dedicated citizens who will continue to engage with the Ashbrook Center to secure the promise of self-government for themselves and their country.”

STUDENT SPOTLIGHT

Oliver’s “New Birth of Freedom”

Oliver, a high school student from Ohio, confessed that when he arrived at the Academy, “I had no idea how to read any of this stuff.” He said that he had seen excerpts of primary documents in class before but had always glossed over them, opting for a textbook description. “I took the easy way out,” Oliver said. “I never really read the actual documents.”

During his weeklong course on “Abraham Lincoln and the Civil War”, Oliver began reading and discussing the core documents of the Civil War. Some of the key questions raised with his Ashbrook professors and fellow students, included:

- Did the Declaration of Independence promise equality for all?
- Was the Constitution a pro-slavery or anti-slavery document?
- What was the cause of the Civil War? What was proven by its outcome?

Oliver became fascinated by the story told in the words of those who lived and wrote the documents in front of him. Motivated by a sense of wonder and discovery, he joined in the conversation and began asking his own questions as he and others in the class read more deeply into the documents. “It was like we were all teaching each other,” Oliver said.

By the end of the week, Oliver understood—perhaps for the first time in his life—the true promise of America. He discovered for himself that his country was a good country, worthy of his respect. He also discovered that he had an important role to play in preserving it. He was so moved, in fact, that he answered the clarion call of Lincoln’s Gettysburg Address some 160 years later, declaring that for him the Academy was “a new birth of freedom!”

A GRATEFUL NEW GENERATION

How often do you hear that young people these days are ungrateful? The entitled students often showcased on the news may appear ungrateful—but that’s certainly not the case for the high school students participating in the Hilda E. Bretzlaff Ashbrook Academy!

The Hilda E. Bretzlaff Foundation has been involved in funding the Academy since its inception eight years ago. The foundation was established in honor of Mrs. Bretzlaff, who loved America and wanted to support education that helped young people become responsible citizens dedicated to preserving freedom in America. This year, over 150 students came from across the country to participate in the Academy. In summer 2022, the Academy offered seven different courses, including two new courses:

- Telling America’s Story
- Abraham Lincoln and the Civil War
- The Supreme Court and the Constitution
- World War II and the Cold War: The American Defense of Liberty
- Great Works of the Humanities
- Capitalism vs. Socialism (New in 2022!)
- Literature and the American Story (New in 2022!)
Gabriela T. is an outstanding Ashbrook teacher from Middletown, Texas, who brings an immigrant’s gratitude to the constitutionally guaranteed rights many Americans take for granted. Growing up in Argentina, she remembers an ostensibly democratic society haunted by memories of the “disappeared”—citizens seized and presumably killed because of their suspected sympathy with opposition groups. Gabriela came to America for a better life and to pursue her education. After several moves around the country, getting married, and having two children, she felt called to become an American history teacher. Having experienced the goodness of America, Gabriela wanted to know, “Why did the American Revolution work so well here in the U.S., so much better than democratic revolutions in Latin America?”

Gabriela found answers in Ashbrook’s Master of Arts in American History and Government program. Her first course on the American Revolution immersed her in the political thought of the revolutionary generation, revealing to her “what the ideals of the Revolution were and still are.” This study convinced her that education lay at the heart of her question. “People in other countries might talk about unalienable rights,” Gabriela said, “but it doesn’t mean they understand what this means.” For America’s Founders, their understanding of their rights to life and liberty was no passing political opinion—it was a truth they knew in their hearts and minds and were prepared to defend. This realization confirmed her choice of career, as she recognized that the fate of “the American Revolution is in the hands of American history teachers, because if we don’t teach students to value what they have, we could lose it.” Gabriela now helps her middle school students “learn how we came to be” as a nation and “teaches them to value the freedoms that they have.” Preserving and perfecting America’s experiment in self-government is the task her students face, and with Gabriela’s clear-eyed and passionate guidance, they have the best possible opportunity to do just that.

The Influence of One Teacher

Do you remember a teacher who changed the way you thought about a subject? Perhaps this teacher helped transform your life. That is the kind of teacher your support can make possible. And that’s the influence an Ashbrook teacher can have on our youngest citizens because they have taken the time to deepen their own understanding of American history and civic education. When they return to their classrooms, they are well prepared to help their students learn to think through the enduring questions of American history for themselves and become responsible citizens capable of perpetuating the promise of America.

Multiply the transformational capacity of one teacher by the hundreds of students they can teach each year over a 40-year career, and you will begin to see the full scope of Ashbrook’s Teaching American History programs. Each Ashbrook teacher can have a profound effect on up to 3000 students over the course of their career. That’s 5000 citizens who will shape the future direction of our country.

Introducing From Bullets to Ballots: The Election of 1800 and the First Peaceful Transfer of Political Power

In 1800, the American people did something no people had done before. They carried out a peaceful transfer of contested political power with a democratic election. This achievement did not follow inevitably from the arrangements established a decade earlier in the Constitution. In fact, during most of the decade prior to the election of 1800, Democratic-Republicans and Federalists had waged a bitter partisan contest that split Americans into hostile factions and destroyed personal friendships. Each faction accused the other of treachery and treason. Newspapers and pamphlets spread falsehoods and slanders. At one point, threatening partisan crowds gathered outside George Washington’s home in Philadelphia. Yet, on March 4, 1801, the winner, Thomas Jefferson, peacefully assumed the duties of president, as prescribed by law.

Sound familiar? There is a lot our nation can learn from a close study of the election of 1800. This academic year Ashbrook republished an important work to help teachers and students. In From Bullets to Ballots: The Election of 1800 and the First Peaceful Transfer of Political Power, John Zvesper explains why the peaceful transfer of power occurred, despite all the partisan acrimony of the decade that preceded it. Zvesper highlights the profound significance of the election of 1800, and what it means for the possibility of self-government today. He recalls that in his Inaugural Address, President Jefferson told his fellow Americans that “every difference of opinion, is not a difference of principle”–pointing back to the ideals of 1776, he reminded them–and us–that we are “brethren of the same principle.”

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. — Declaration of Independence

“Learning about American history has not only helped me understand the nation but it has helped me understand myself. It hit me in the soul—this is part of my identity.”

Our Cause is Growing

Benjamin Franklin, America’s first great philanthropist, said that “hope and faith” are “famly built upon charity.” As Franklin knew, giving generously out of love for our country inspires faith and hope for our future. Ashbrook is pleased that so many good Americans recognize the importance of our mission and are choosing to give most charitably to future generations. In fact, more Americans than ever before are joining Ashbrook to stand up for America. During the last academic year Ashbrook received contributions from over 800 new supporters. These supporters represent all 50 states. And for the first time ever, the Director’s Club—those who give $1,000 or more annually—grew to over 300 members!

Thank you!

National Advisory Board on Civic Education Welcomes New Investors

Ashbrook created the National Advisory Board on Civic Education to encourage a renewed dedication to civic education in nationwide. Since its creation, Ashbrook has welcomed several trailblazers to the board who are stepping up with their own significant investments in civic education:

Bill Amos, a retired physician and business executive, was motivated to invest in civic education out of concern for his own family. His grandchildren were soon to head off to college, and he wanted to ensure they “were intellectually equipped to argue back against the radical ideas they were sure to encounter. He founded a non-profit to help educate children in his home of Nassau County, Florida, about the Constitution and joined Ashbrook’s Statesman Society, investing in the teachers who will spread his vision nationwide.

Bob Oster, former Chief Financial Officer of Oracle Corporation, has spent his life investing in companies he believes in. His entrepreneurial mindset is driven by a deep love for the opportunity and freedom America provides to those who wish to better the world. Through his investment in civic education as a Statesman Society member, Bob hopes to inspire that same love in young Americans of all ages.

Vivek Ramaswamy, an entrepreneur who founded the biopharmaceutical company Roivant Sciences, has quickly become a leading voice against identity politics and “wokeism” in America, writing two best-selling books on these topics. Having personally witnessed the disdain that many corporate and academic elites have for America, Vivek joined Ashbrook as a Patriot Society member to help reverse this negative trend in the rising generations.

Thank you to these good Americans and all of those who support Ashbrook and invest so generously in America’s future.
